It is not news that angel investing has taken off the last few years. Starting with the rise of incubators like Y Combinator and early successes of the ‘Paypal Mafia’ angel investing has slowly risen in volume and breadth until today where many are claiming that the angel round has replaced the Series A Financing. Techcrunch estimates that from the period of 2007-2012, the number of Angel investments grew by almost 6x, while Series A rounds only grew by about 1.6x, and totaled $707 million in 2012. Angel investing and its legal and business terms have continued to mature and evolve over the years. Come listen to this webinar which will discuss the trends, terms and issues associated with angel investing.
